There are six clear parallels with the Cold War. First, U.S.-China rivalry is between the world's two most powerful states, one a liberal democracy and the other avowedly communist.

During the Cold War, the choice facing ruling elites in Western countries was between perpetuating the interwar laissez faire system that had created working class misery, and which in turn threatened to create an opening for Communists, and building welfare states. Even for conservatives, that was an easy choice. Building North Atlantic welfare states in the postwar period was an explicitly ...
